

Discharge advice for a child's clavicle (collar bone) fracture

Issued by the orthopaedic department

Your child has broken their clavicle (collar bone). This type of break is common in children, and usually heals well.

What happens next?

An orthopaedic trauma consultant (a doctor who specialises in fractures) will review your child's x-rays. If any other treatment is needed, or if we need to see your child for review in the fracture clinic you will be contacted by phone or letter in the next five working days. If nothing further is required we will not contact you, however if you have any concerns please call the helpline number in this booklet.

Shoulder sling

Painkillers and a sling are all that are needed.

Your child will need to use the sling for about two weeks after the injury. They can move their arm and shoulder and do without the sling sooner if they are able to.

The collar bone will be painful for 4 – 6 weeks.

Painkillers

It is important to give your child appropriate doses of paracetamol or ibuprofen to help with the pain. Ask your pharmacist for advice about this.

Sleeping

Your child may find it more comfortable to sleep sitting upright for a few days after the injury.

When can my child return to regular activities?

Your child may return to sports such as swimming as soon as they are comfortable, but should avoid contact sports, such as football, rugby and basketball, for six weeks.

There will be a lump over the broken bone. This is quite normal, and is produced by healing bone. It may take up to a year to disappear.

If your child is older than ten years a small lump may remain.

If your child is still experiencing a lot of pain after two months, please phone the helpline for further advice.

We wish your child a speedy recovery.
